> Fair Weather Unionists Forgot Their Friends When Fortune Smiled-How They Were Regenerated-A Bit of Union History.

In a recent issue of the Bulletin of the clothing trades S. J. Stern, the paper's Chicago correspondent, related a bit of union history that was written in an lilinois town some eight years that will not be injured by reading this little chapter; therefore it is here reproduced:

'About eight years ago an organization fever struck the town. Almost every craft was organized in a very short time. Shortly after this some one suggested that the clerks or saleamen ought to be organized. At this time the stores opened at about 7 a. m. and remained open until D and 10 at night, sometimes even later. On Sundays they were open from 9 a, m, to 1 or 2

"The union men of this certain city formed a trades council, and a committee thereof succeeded in getting all the male clerks into the union. It was then decided to also take in the women and go to the employers or merchants and ask them to open at 7:30 a, m. and to close at 6 p. m. every night except Saturday, when they could remain open until 10 p. m., and not to open on Sunday. After considerable difficulty the 6 o'clock closing rule won out.

"About two years after this, at each meeting of the trades council, the financial secretary of the clerks' union would come to the meeting and report that So-and-so, at such and such a store, was three months behind, and So-and-so would not pay dues any more. After each complaint a com-There are in New York city 168,000 mittee of three from the trades council members of clubs that days an enroll- would call on the delinguent and force him or her to pay. The water rents are union was seen at the trades council. 250,000 more each mouth than they In the meantime other unions were progressing nicely in this city. About this time a member of the printers' union, who was a great advocate of the union label, wanted to buy a new suit of clothes. He went from store to store to get a clerk with a card which was up to date, but none could be found. He also found that the cierks were pushing nonunion

"At the next meeting of the trades council this printer, who had done a great deal of work for the clerks, got up and made a motion that the trades council request the merchants to keep open until 9 o'clock every night, also Her tongue runs as if it was bung in | to keep open on Sunday mornings. American Journal of titled to any consideration from the trades council, as they were not paying and also that, masmuch as they had given up their union, they ought "Well," said he, anxious to patch up also to give up the benefits the union

"A committee was appointed to call on the merchants, and the printer was on that committee. Every newspaper in the city published an article, saying that the stores would be open bereafter until 9 p. m., also Sunday mornings. "This aroused the clerks, and it certainly must have been a grand sight that the downger empress doesn't see to have seen the number of people present at the meeting which the last ness .- New York Herald president of the union called for the following Sunday afternoon. The way the trades council, and particularly the printer, were abused was a fright.

"Various resolutions were introduced, and finally a committee of five was appointed to go to the next meeting of the trades council. This committee expected to tell the delegates to the trades council a few things, but when they got there, in place of telling, they were told a few things, and they went back and told the other clerks just where the trouble was. As a result of this the cierus again got together and formed a bona fide union, every clerk | go Record-Heraid. paid up his back dues, and the trades council committee again called on the merchants and had the signs removed. It then developed that the merchants had no desire to keep open at night or on Sunday, but that the printer and his committee had simply got the merchants to co-operate with them to force the clerks to become good union men, so that it would not be necessary for the committee to call on this or that store every mouth to collect dues."

BOILING WATER.

The Process Said to Kill All Its Life Giving Qualities.

Charles H. Mason of Saratoga, discussing the typhoid fever situation, opposed the boiling of Potomac water as a preventive of the spread of this disease. To boil the water, he contends, is to take from it all its life giving qualities. "It appears that prior to the installation of your filtration plant," said Mr. Meson, "it was claimed by the authorities that filtration would reduce the danger of the fever to a minimum and guarantee to the people of Washington a clear and wholesome water at all times. The question of pure water and how to maintain it is a serious one for any city, and it probably is natural for the authorities to assert the belief that infection comes from some source other than the water now provided. Whatever may be the enuse, it is a well known fact that all water loses two-thirds or more of its life giving preperties when it is boiled. Still the authorities here are advocating the boiling of the water. Those who urge this remedy lose sight of the fact that water has life giving as well as life destroying germs. When you boll it you kill both germs and have a dead water. This applies to all bottled chemist knows the minute water is separated from earth it becomes stale. We drink water in bottles that has been corked up months at a time, and those who buy and use it think they are bettering themselves, but not one of them would think of drinking a glass of Potomac water that had stood over night. Yet the one is as good as the other se far as any life giving property is concerned. These bettled waters are charged with gas to make them sparkle, but nothing that can be done to them can keep them 'alive.' The typhold fever germ may be in the Potemac water, and if it is belled the germ probably will be killed, but drinking boiled water does the system absolutely no good, and what the system freshes and revives." - Washington
